Historical note

The Century Company published periodicals and books. It was founded in New York City in 1881. Century's primary publication was The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine, which was regarded as the best general periodical of its time during the 1880s and 1890s. The Century Company had previously been a subsidiary of Charles Scribner's and Sons and called Scribners and Company. In 1881, Roswell Smith bought Scribners and Company for $2,000,000 and renamed it the Century Company, after the Century Club in New York. The magazine, then called Scribners Monthly, was renamed The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine. The Century Company's other publications included the ten-volume Abraham Lincoln, George Keenan's Siberia, and William Sloane's Life of Napoleon Bonaparte, all of which first appeared in part or full in The Century, the Century Dictionary, and St. Nicholas, a juvenile magazine.

When Roswell Smith formed his new company, he took with him the men who had made Scribners and Company successful: Josiah Gilbert Holland (who died shortly thereafter), Richard Watson Gilder, Alexander W. Drake, and Robert Underwood Johnson. Under Gilder's editorial leadership, The Century Illustrated Magazine thrived; Smith gave Gilder a free hand in forming editorial policy, and Gilder was ably supported by his associate editor, Johnson, and a team of dedicated and loyal editors. The magazine became noted for its short stories, poems, documentation of historical events, and fine woodcut illustrations, which, under Alexander W. Drake, superintendent of the art department, set the standard for quality in late nineteenth century commercial art.

The Century's greatest success was its series of articles on the history of the Civil War. The "War Series" began in November 1884 and continued for more than three years. It was conceived of by another member of Gilder's inner circle, Clarence Clough Buel, who assisted Johnson in editing the series. The series consisted of first-hand remembrances of events written by Union and Confederate combatants; 230 participants, from privates to generals (including Grant and Sherman), contributed. The series also included nearly 2,000 engravings, often based on the photographs of Matthew B. Brady and Alexander Gardner. The series doubled the magazine's circulation (to 250,000) and made the Century Company $1 million. The Century later published the articles as a four volume book, Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, also edited by Underwood and Buel.

Although The Century enjoyed years of critical and commercial success under Gilder's editorship, competition from cheaper magazines and newspapers during the early 20th century eventually resulted in declining readership. After Gilder's death in 1909, Robert Underwood Johnson became The Century's editor. Johnson tried to convince the publisher to start a new, inexpensive magazine to meet the competition. He failed. Johnson resigned after Roswell Smith's successor as President, Frank H. Scott, passed away. The woodcut illustrations for which The Century had been known were finally discontinued under the editorship of Hewitt H. Howland (1912-1930). In 1929, The Century Magazine became a quarterly. In 1930, the owners of The Forum bought The Century and merged it with their magazine.

Scope and content note

The Century Company records consist of correspondence, manuscripts, vouchers, proofs of articles, and other materials concerning the publications of the Century Company. General correspondence consists mostly of correspondence with contributors or potential contributors to The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine and interoffice correspondence and memoranda filed under the names of editors and other Century staff, including Richard Watson Gilder, Robert Underwood Johnson, Clarence Clough Buel, Sophie Bledsoe Herrick, and Alexander Drake. Civil War material consists of correspondence, manuscripts, proofs, notes, lists, memoranda, and printed matter emanating from The Century "War Series" and the resulting book, Battles and Leaders of the Civil War. The Contributors series contains manuscripts and correspondence related to specific articles in The Century. The St. Nicholas materials include correspondence, manuscripts, and vouchers for the juvenile magazine. The Spanish-American War correspondence relates to The Century's series on the war. Yosemite National Park correspondence documents Robert Underwood Johnson's and The Century's efforts to promote forest conservation. Permit books contain correspondence, 1904-1924, relating to The Century's requesting permission to reproduce art and text. Correspondents include Susan Brownell Anthony, Clara Barton, Poultney Bigelow, Henry Guy Carleton, Andrew Carnegie, Willa Cather, James Fenimore Cooper, Jefferson Davis, Frederick Samuel Dellenbaugh, Theodore Dreiser, Worthington C. Ford, Paul Leicester Ford, Isabel Florence Hapgood, Julian Hawthorne, Henry Holt, Elizabeth Shaw Melville, Frederick Law Olmsted, Jacob August Riis, August St. Gaudens, Albert Shaw, Elizabeth Drew Barstow Stoddard, Mariana (Griswold) Van Renesselaer and Edith Wharton.

Series V. Spanish American War Series - Correspondence

The Spanish-American War Series was modeled on the Civil War Series; the Century had participants in the war to have the participants give their accounts of specific events. The series proved less successful than its celebrated predecessor.

Series VI. Yosemite National Park - Correspondence

In 1889, Robert Underwood Johnson took a pack trip through the Yosemite country in California with John Muir. He was so impressed with the devastation being wrought by thousands of grazing sheep that he outlined two Century articles for Muir, enlisted Gilder's support, and in the next year was largely instrumental in persuading Congress to create Yosemite National Park. Thereafter, Johnson and the Century continued to work in the cause of forest conservation. This correspondence documents Johnson's efforts.
